The Times' Daily Short Story.

The LAST of the INDIAN HEROINES

[Original.]
This is the true story of an Indian woman whose devotion to the white race some thirty-five years ago resulted in sacrifice and heroism.
In 1871, when the gold fever was leading men across the lava beds lying between Oregon and California, a young Kootenai, an ex-servant of the United States army—Frank Riddle—was among those who trespassed upon that desolate region. He found there Winema, an Indian girl, fifteen years old, who was considered the most attractive of the Modoc women. Riddle not only got gold, but he got Winema for his wife. The young couple lived in the gold diggings, and the wife became weaned from her people. But she knew that if she showed this change or a love for her husband to her people they would kill her.

As more gold fields were discovered, more whites swarmed across the lava beds, and the Indians began to murder them. This incited the whites to revenge, and a band of seventy-five men went from California to punish the Indians. After pursuing them for a long while to no purpose they invited the chiefs to meet them for the purpose of making a treaty. The invitation was accepted, and both parties went into camp near each other on Lost river. In the gray of the morning of the proposed conference a young Modoc squaw, with clothes torn and feet bleeding, hurried into the white camp and asked to see the leader. She had walked nine miles over a rough mountain trail to warn them that at the conference they were to be murdered. This she had learned the night before at the council fire.

The whites, impressed with the truth of her story, determined to meet running with cunning. Going into ambush near the place of meeting, the Modocs fell into their trap and but two escaped with their lives. The squaw who bore the information was Winema. Her people never learned that she had saved the whites at their expense or that she would have died by torture.
The massacre of Indians brought on a war between the United States troops and the Modocs. General Canby commanded the troops, while the Modocs fought under an Indian called Captain Jack. Riddle and other whites who had married squaws strove to effect a settlement, but failed. Winema, who had done much to prevent the murder of settlers by her people, continued her efforts, but now both she and her husband began to be suspected of a preference for the whites. Winema's food was poisoned, and she was obliged to sleep in secret places for fear of being murdered.

Two peace conferences were agreed upon between the whites and the Indians. At the first the Indians did not appear. The second was arranged between the commander of the military post of the district, Colonel Meacham, who was doing all in his power to right the wrongs on account of which the Indians were fighting. When he was about to start to attend the conference Winema besought him to remain away. Since he would not listen to her she grasped his bridle rein, at the same time calling upon General Canby, who was also to attend the conference, to listen to her. When she found they would not, she mounted her pony and rode with them.

What followed filled the country with horror. The meeting was an Indian trap and resulted in a massacre. General Canby was murdered. A blood-thirsty Indian, Scouchin, attacked Colonel Meacham. Winema threw herself upon the savage and begged him to spare her white friend's life. Other Indians came up, and Winema ran among them, turning their weapons aside or knocking them upward.

A bullet struck Meacham senseless, and a buck ran forward to dispatch him. The squaw turned the weapon, crying: "Him dead! No use to shoot!" Scouchin tried to scalp Meacham, and Winema grasped the knife. Scouchin struck her. Then she shouted: "The soldiers are coming!" This turned out to be true, and in another moment a troop of cavalry dashed among the Indians. Seeing among the other Indians a squaw, many carbines were aimed at her. "No shoot me!" she cried. "I tried to save them!" Then a yell in the ranks recognized her and said:

"The man who harms her I'll kill!"
Such is the story of this woman's work. By her first warning she saved seventy-five white men. Had those to whom she gave her second warning listened to her she would have saved a major general and a colonel in the United States army. The penalty she and her husband paid for her fidelity to the whites only remains to be stated. On the day of the killing of Canby and Meacham, Riddle, while riding on horseback over the lava beds, was shot from an ambush by an Indian. The three little children of Riddle and Winema were murdered while sleeping and the hut burned over them. Winema, fleeing at night from her tribe and her family, made her way across the lava beds to the government post. Though ill and desolate in the loss of her husband and her children, she nursed Colonel Meacham, who had been wounded by six bullets. But Winema's work was finished. Her life had been lived. She had become a helpless invalid. The government put Captain Jack and his subordinate chiefs through the form of a trial, and Winema bore witness against them. They were hanged, and Winema was murdered for her part in their hanging. She was shot through the chest one evening while sitting by a window in the house where she lived alone. ROSE TREAT TUBBER.

Turbans the Modish Headgear—Brown and Gray a Smart Combination.

Turbans are to be the fashionable fall and winter hats for general service. They are smartly trimmed at the back with wide, outstanding bows.

Many of the new coats show position backs. This is a style that looks up on the modish horizon every few years, but it is not taken up with much enthusiasm.

If you want to have a smart costume this winter let it be in tones of brown and gray. The combination is not alluring or wildly becoming, but it is very fashionable.

Lace will be used quite as much on gowns this winter as it has for the past few seasons. There is a leaning in favor of Spanish laces, due to the popularity of the new queen of Spain. Pink is a popular shade just now, and there is one shade of very pale blue and deep blue, dark green, navy blue, lemon color and pale green. Piping will appear on many of the winter suits. This trimming is particularly attractive on mixed chevrons and tweed costumes.

Bolero jackets and jaunty little coats of black lace are to rival the same effects in white lace that have been so smart for several seasons. Then there are all kinds of fancy yokes, flous and chemises carried out in black Spanish lace.

All the fall tailor makes have a touch of dressiness about the bodice or coat in the form of inset appliques or fancy braids.

Navv blue broadcloth makes the attractive gown in the cut. The plain skirt is stitched in several rows at the footline. The bolero has a design of black braid in geometrical pattern. About the T shaped neck is a dainty finish of plaited white mull. The flaring cuffs on the short sleeves show this plaited edge. JUDIC CHOLLET.

Beethoven could play from memory all the preludes and fugues contained in Bach's "Well Tempered Clavier." There are forty-eight preludes and the same number of fugues, and as each is in the most abstract style of counterpoint the difficulty of this performance will be appreciated by every musician.

SPLIT IN THE LIBERALS

The Moscow Workmen Not to Go to Douma—Police Forbid Their Standing at the Coming Elections.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 25.—The cause of conservative liberalism as represented by the Octoberists and Peaceful Regenerationists has suffered a great blow in the loss of Dmitri Shipoff, the veteran Liberal, and the central figure in Russian politics, who in a letter to the committee of Octoberists announces his withdrawal from the party which he led in the last campaign. His retirement is due to disagreements with Alexander J. Guchkoff, and others of his colleagues, whose views approving Premier Stolypin's measures of repression prevailed after a hard fight in the central committee. Mr. Guchkoff, who has now succeeded to the leadership of the party, in an open letter to Prince Eugene Troubesky, the Constitutional Democrat, reiterates his approval of drunkenness, martial and other measures of firm repression, declaring that a liberal or even a radical government would be unable to cope with revolutionary terrorism without that and that it is the trustworthiness of the police and the army and navy, and not the nobility, that is the basis of the present order. The letter says, "namely, lynch law, armed revolt, and civil war." The letter condemns the Constitutional Democrats for seeking to persuade the people that an understanding between the government and the people is impossible and for preventing by extravagant demands any other issue than actual revolution. "Even if the right of revolution is recognized, it must shrink from the fratricidal strife which would follow. In such a population as Russia's, it would exceed in savagery and barbarity all previous civil wars. If those who led Russia into a needless foreign war are guilty, how much more culpable would be those plunging the empire into a ghastly internal war when the situation presents another issue. Excesses and revolution would bury our young liberty and all of our culture."

The chief of police of Moscow has forbidden workmen to vote for their representatives in the parliamentary elections on the ground that the government considers the council of workmen's delegates a revolutionary organization.

At an extraordinary meeting at Kurik Sunday in favor of the nobility it was decided by a vote of 95 to 3 to expel from the ranks of the nobility three members of the late parliament, including Prince Peter Dolgoroukoff, the vice president of the lower house, who signed the Viborg manifesto.

It now transpires that the Black Hundreds, acting in collusion with the anarchists, had elaborated plans for a violent attack on the Jews on the occasion of the Jewish New Year, and that the carrying out of these plans was only averted by the extraordinary alertness and energy shown by the authorities. General Guchkoff, professor of Odessa, in the absence of Governor General Kaibler, has telegraphed information concerning the plot to Premier Stolypin.

Although the danger is believed to be past, the preventive measures inaugurated by the officials have not been relaxed. The Jews continue to be apprehensive of trouble and the beating of Jews in the streets continues.

There are strong suspicions here that the throwing of a bomb at General Sollogub, governor general of the Baltic provinces, at Riga, Saturday, was a stage affair arranged to strengthen his position, which is said to have been greatly shaken owing to his inability to restore order in the Baltic provinces, and especially because of the representations made by the German embassy on the murder at Riga, September 15, of Herr Bush, a leader of the Germany colony there, and that the bomb, which exploded ten paces away, without inflicting a scratch, was a harmless petard.

Its effect is contrasted to that of a bomb left in a newspaper office here recently, which after being immersed in water for a fortnight, was detonated with terrific force. Such measures to excite sympathy are not without precedent in Russia.

It is reported here that the Japanese are erecting fortifications in southern Saghalin, contrary to the treaty of Portsmouth.

PRaises MEN OF ARMY

And Also of Navy—Sailor Was Excluded From Dance Hall Because He Was in a Uniform.

Oyster Bay, N. Y., Sept. 25.—President Roosevelt has contributed $100 to be used by Rear Admiral Thomas in a legal suit to determine whether a man may be excluded from a public place of entertainment because he wears the uniform of the United States army or navy, just as much when worn by a sailor as when worn by a soldier.

Oyster Bay, L. I., Sept. 21, 1906.
Dear Admiral Thomas—I enclose $100 to be used in that suit, which thanks to you has been so wisely undertaken, to test the legality of excluding any man from any public place of entertainment because he wears the United States uniform. I feel that it is the duty of every good citizen to endeavor in every shape and way to make it plain that he regards the uniform of the United States Army as navy, just as much when worn by a enlisted man as when worn by an officer, as a badge of honor and therefore entitling the wearer to honor so long as he behaves decently. There is no finer body of men in all our country than the enlisted men of the army and navy of the United States, and I cannot sufficiently express my indignation and contempt for any man who treats his uniform save with the respect to which it is entitled. If a man misbehaves himself then no matter what uniform he wears, he should be dealt with accordingly; but the fact of wearing the United States uniform should be accepted as presumptive evidence that the man who wears it is all right; and any discrimination against the uniform as such, is more than presumptive evidence that the man thus discriminating is wrong.

Sincerely yours,
Theodore Roosevelt.

Rear Admiral Thomas is reported to be paying half the expense of the suit for $500 damages brought by Chief Yeoman F. J. Buezele, against the Newport Amusement Company, of Newport, R. I., on the ground that he was excluded from a dance hall while in uniform. Buezele is on duty at the naval training station at Newport. The suit will not be tried until Oct. 2 or later.

Appraising a Gilded Joss.
An insurance man who has been busy for some months with the problems of adjustment arising from the San Francisco fire says that one of the queerest questions was the loss on a Chinaman's joss, a big gilded god.

The adjuster found that some sixty or seventy minor josses were also insured. When he reported this he was certainly had a merry time trying to figure how much a god was worth who couldn't care for himself. But he finally arranged a scale of values that satisfied everybody.

Horse Breathes Through Silver Tube.
Affection for Tom, a big black truck horse that will shake hands and roll over at his master's bidding, has led James Stone of Thomaston, Conn., to employ the most eminent Connecticut surgeons and spend hundreds of dollars in an effort to save the animal's life. At present Tom is enjoying his life while breathing freely through a silver tube eight inches long. He is the only horse in the world that has undergone the delicate operation of tracheotomy.

Everyone doubtless remembers the story about the hysterical manner in which he consulted John of Cronstadt, the miracle-working priest, concerning the necessity of the throne, and how the latter undertook to cure him with forces of nature to give the czar a son. After the failure of John of Cronstadt to perform that important duty, the czar lost faith in him for a time, but I understand that the miracle worker has since been restored to favor and is now in the habit of advising his majesty concerning his religious duties.

The anxiety of his majesty to secure an heir caused him to do many ridiculous things. One of them was his incognito pilgrimage to the tomb of a holy priest called Seraphine, where the peasant women who are denied motherhood go to pray. The czar and empress made the pilgrimage by the advice of Vladimir, the metropolitan patriarch of the Greek church—the highest ecclesiastical authority in the country—who told them that such an act of veneration would undoubtedly be rewarded by the birth of a son. How the czar, who was brought up a Protestant, and is regarded as a very sensible woman, could have been induced to go through this performance is difficult to explain. The empress was not aware of the facts at the time. The imperial couple were reported to be residing in one of their country retreats, while disguised in the garb of pilgrims they were actually making their way on foot to the shrine of the holy man, a distance of more than 100 miles. Both of them remained there for a week or so, praying for a boy, and resolving the sacrament at times every morning with other pilgrims.

Upon the return to the capital the czar ordered the monk Seraphine to be imprisoned, and the latter's name now appears at the end of the list of saints recognized by the orthodox Greek church.

A few months later Alexis, heir to the throne of Russia, was born. He is now a lusty youngster nearly two years old.—W. E. Curtis in the Washington Star.

THE CZAR'S SUPERSTITIONS.

Believes in the Occult and Has Done Many Ridiculous Things.

Curious stories are told about the whims and peculiarities of the emperor of Russia, which would be amusing if they did not involve the happiness and welfare of 140,000,000 of people. He is a mystic; all mysteries appeal to him. He believes in miracles and all sorts of occult things. He is a spiritualist; he believes in clairvoyance, amulets and various other superstitions. For example, he carries a coin in his pocket which he believes is necessary for the protection of his life, and will go nowhere without it. He is confident of its power as a talisman.

Three years ago or so, Bernard Tutenauer, a Jewish shoemaker at Radatz, Austria, gave supper and lodging to a mysterious wandering rabbi from the Orient. In the morning the departing guest handed his host two antique coins, saying that they were all he had to give in payment for his entertainment, but they had much greater value than modern currency, because they possessed the power of protecting people who carry them from unseen dangers.

The shoemaker put the coins away with other trinkets and forgot all about them, until one day, when he had a dream, in which Alexander III, the late czar, appeared at his bedside and begged him to send the coins to his son, Nicholas II, in order that he might have the benefit of their protection against the terrorists and other perils to which he is exposed. Radatz is near to Vienna, and the rabbi, Tutenauer, hence Tutenauer sent the coins to the Russian ambassador at the Austrian capital, with a detailed account of their history, which was written for him by the Jewish schoolmaster of the town. The ambassador forwarded them to Count Lamoriniere, then minister of foreign affairs, at St. Petersburg, and the latter after having them thoroughly washed and tested at the imperial laboratory in order to remove all danger of poison, presented them to the emperor, who was so much interested in the story that he ordered them to be kept in the imperial treasury.

Many doubtless remember the terrible tumult which occurred at Moscow on the coronation day, when nearly 10,000 people were killed and wounded. This disaster was foretold to his majesty in a dream several nights before it occurred, and in the morning, upon awakening, he described in graphic language the heaps of dead bodies which he had seen on the commons outside the city, where a free feast was spread for the people. The eagerness of the multitude to reach the tables caused a struggle and a stampede in which several thousands were trampled to death.

The superstition of the czar, being well known in the empire, naturally attracts to him all sorts of prophets, clairvoyants and other impostors, and he has been imposed upon repeatedly. All prophets are welcome, provided their predictions are favorable, but those who bring bad tidings are often punished.

There is at Moscow a well known crazy priest, who, from time to time, makes some rather surprising predictions, and who is generally believed by the people to have the gift of prophecy. Nicholas sent for him and asked to have his fortune told. The priest, whose name is Mitka Boso, went into a trance according to his custom, and while his spirit was in communication with the unseen, made the ghastly prediction that wherever he went during all his life, his majesty would tread on dead bodies, and that his reign would see a continuous weeping of the nation. His majesty was greatly distressed and indignant. At first he suspected that Mitka Boso had been coached to make this prophecy by the revolutionists and ordered him sent to prison, but upon reflection and having become convinced that the man was honest, and ordered his release a few days later.

Everyone doubtless remembers the story about the hysterical manner in which he consulted John of Cronstadt, the miracle-working priest, concerning the necessity of the throne, and how the latter undertook to cure him with forces of nature to give the czar a son. After the failure of John of Cronstadt to perform that important duty, the czar lost faith in him for a time, but I understand that the miracle worker has since been restored to favor and is now in the habit of advising his majesty concerning his religious duties.

DESCENDANTS OF WILKES BOY.

Four of Them Made Grand Showing at Readville.

It is seldom that any one family furnishes so many high-class, successful performers at a grand circuit meeting as did the Wilkes Boy branch of the Wilkes family at Readville. The 2.05 pace was won by Gratt, that finished first three times in 2.03 1/2, 2.03 3/4, 2.03 3/4, and Baron Gratt finished second in each heat. The winner, Gratt, and the horse that forced him out in each are both by Gratt, trotting record 2.13, a son of Wilkes Boy, 2.24 1/2. Angiola, that finished first three times in the 2.07 trot in 2.08 1/2, 2.09 1/2, 2.09 3/4, another son of Wilkes Boy, 2.24 1/2. Restate, that won the last two heats and greater part of the purse for free-for-all trotters, in the sensational time of 2.03 1/2, 2.03 3/4, thus establishing a new world's race record for mares, is by Oratorio, trotting record 2.13, another son of Wilkes Boy.

The American Horse Breeder has the following to say of the great sire, Wilkes Boy, 2.24 1/2, by George Wilkes, was from a highly bred dam and all three of his sons named above also received an additional inheritance of speed and other successful racing qualities through their dams. Wilkes Boy was from the great brood-mare Betty Brown, whose sire, Mambrino Patchen 88, was by Mambrino Chief, and from a daughter of the thoroughbred Gano, with other thoroughbred crosses close up through his second dam. The dam of Betty Brown was Pickles, by Mambrino Chief 11, and her second dam was by Brown's Bellfounder, he by the Norfolk trotter imported Bellfounder.

It has been claimed that Brown's Bellfounder was the best bred son of imported Bellfounder, and judging by the large amount of the valuable blood of imported Messenger that he inherited through his dam, the claim was well founded. The dam Brown's Bellfounder was the intensely bred Lady Allport, whose sire was Mambrino, the thoroughbred son of imported Messenger, that got Aladdin, the sire of Rye's Hambletonian 19, and also got Mambrino Paymaster, the sire of Mambrino Chief 11. The dam of Lady Allport was Tippoo Sahib, and he, too, was a thoroughbred son of imported Messenger. The second dam of Lady Allport was by imported Messenger himself. The great brood-mare, Belle, that produced McHardy's Hambletonian, 2.25 1/2, was also the dam of the producing sires Alexander's Belmont 64, Fritz and Lucas Broadhead, was bred in lines similar to those that produced Pickles, for she, too, was by Mambrino Chief and from a daughter of Brown's Bellfounder. The third dam of Betty Brown was by the noted four-mile race horse Gray Eagle an inbred Diomed—Springfield Republican.

Mad Bull Charges a Carriage.

As a herd of cattle was being driven through one of the principal streets of Marion, O., Isaac A. Merchant, president of the City National bank, and his brother, C. B. Merchant, had thrilling escapes. Four monster bulls in the herd, enraged by a red banner along the street, charged bither and thither. One particularly fierce bull attacked the buggy in which the brothers were seated and overturned it. The bull repeated its attacks and demolished the vehicle. When the horse ran the bull charged after it. The men were picked up from the street, but neither was badly hurt.

Euphuism.

"He eats pie for breakfast," they say to the beautiful young thing who is going to be introduced to the man.

"How unsmooth," she shudders.

"But he is worth forty millions," they continue.

"Ah, he is not unsmooth," her mother says gently. "He is merely eccentric. Millicent, dear."—Judge.

What Do They Cure?

The above question is often asked concerning Dr. Pierce's two leading medicines, "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription."

The answer is that "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most potent alterative or blood-purifier, and tonic or invigorator, and acts especially beneficially in a curative way upon all the mucous lining surfaces, as of the nasal passages, throat, bronchial tubes, stomach, bowels and bladder, curing a large per cent of catarrhal cases whether the disease affects the nasal passages, the throat, larynx, bronchitis, stomach (as catarrh dyspepsia), bowels (as chronic constipation), bladder, uterus or other pelvic organs. Even in the chronic or idiopathic stages of these affections, it is often successful in effecting a cure.

"Favorite Prescription" is adapted for the cure of one class of diseases, those of a nervous character, and is a powerful yet gently acting invigorant, tonic and nerve tonic. For weak women, overworked women, nervous women, who have caused the breakdown, "Favorite Prescription" will be found most effective in building up the strength, regulating the womanly functions, subduing pain and bringing about a healthy, vigorous condition of the whole system.

A book of particulars wraps each bottle giving the formulae of these medicines and explaining the reasons why they are so effective. Physicians of all the schools of practice as guides in prescribing, say of each medicine, entering into these medicines.

The words of praise bestowed on the several ingredients entering into Dr. Pierce's medicines by such writers should have more weight than any amount of non-professional testimonials, because such men are writing for the guidance of their medical brethren and know whereof they speak.

Both medicines are non-alcoholic, non-secret, and contain no harmful habit-forming drugs, being composed of glyceric extracts of the roots of native American medicinal forest plants. They are both sold by druggists to medicine. You can't afford to accept a substitute for one of these medicines of known composition, any secret nostrum.

Dr. Pierce's medicines, small, sugar-coated, easy to take as candy, regulate and invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels.

WHAT IS WORN.

Embroidered Button Pad—Hats For School Wear—New Sash Purses.

Embroidered buttons are so smart and attractive that many women are embroidering their own little circles of silk, which are afterward used to cover button molds.

Light felt hats are to be modish for early fall wear for school children.

The pretty fashion of wearing fringed sashes, copied from French children, is being taken up by mothers who are just a little tired of the ubiquitous belt. These sashes are made of wide ribbon—the soft, droopy kind—finished with a fringe of heavy silk knotted on in simple or intricate fashion, according to whim. They are worn long enough for the fringe to come to the very edge of the hem or, as in Paris, just below it.

In spite of a strongly increased demand for a larger hat there is a tendency toward a rather greater vogue of the turbal. It is a somewhat long and like most of the modish hats is built up at the back with a bandeau. The trimming is also massed at the back and it not infrequently consists of several short but fluffy ostrich plumes. Occasionally a large bird with a paradise tail is perched on the back of one of these smart turbans and then one knows that the creation is straight from Paris.

The cut shows a fall sleeve model. The puff and tight fitting cuff are made of flannel and the quantity stuffed with soft effect with tubed ends is of cloth. Most attractive, too, is the lace neckpiece illustrated with its knotted tie of soft silk. JUDIC CHOLLET.
